By bringing all these different walks of life together we can build a diverse community with lots of character. It will also bring different races into the community. It also doesn't matter how rich or poor someone is they should always have a house.

A community with fair housing has kindhearted neighbors. It also has very nice friends. Communities with fair housing has neighbors that will not tell you where to live because of their skin. Also it will not have neighbors that will tell you where to live because you do different things than them.

Fair housing means to me that other people can go to the supermarket, the bus stop, and anywhere they like. People can't say to their new neighbors that they can't live there. It doesn't matter that family has a different type/color skin, religion, language, too old, or what they eat. Everyone shouldn't fight or argue because don't want that family to live there. Fair housing means get along, share the streets, and live peacefully. A town that has fair housing, lives nicely together. People should greet others, shake hands, and say hello.

My poster shows that boys or girls men or women are allowed to be in the same skyscraper. It also shows happiness. It also shows people can share the same skyscraper and be joyful. How cares what ethnicity you are or who you are. We should be treated equally.

My poster means that no matter where you're from, what your color is, your age, and your gender, people deserve fair housing. What Fair Housing means to me is that you should live where ever you want without you being judged for your age, gender, color, and etc.
