KTPG supports increased notification requirements concerning specified local projects and requests that the City of San Diego modify the notice requirement in the Municipal Code

Part 1 - The KTPG supports improving the effectiveness of public notices

The Mid-Cities Community Plan includes the concept of a City of Villages. That concept depends upon the community being well-informed of changes to their community, and upon the community members having a say in those changes.

The KTPG believes that the City of San Diego and all its agencies should strive for openness and communication with community members.

The State of California recognizes that residents, property owners, and business owners are entitled to be notified about public or private projects that may have an impact on their daily lives, property values, and livelihood. This includes reaching out directly to community members in certain circumstances. California requires mailed notices to be sent to all addresses within "...300 feet of the real property that is the subject..." of a hearing.

For projects of a certain scale, notifying community members within a 300 foot radius is an appropriate distance. However, some development projects have more impact than others. Some occupy an entire city block, or even more than one city block. There is no set size for a city block. Common sizes in San Diego range from perhaps 250 feet wide to perhaps 750 feet long. Therefore, a 300 foot notice requirement may not even be notifying all properties within one block in each direction

Large projects have a bigger impact on the character of the community, as well on the traffic flow and parking. These impacts often affect the community for considerably more than one block away from the project. As such, projects such as this should be required to provide more notice to the community.

The 300 foot Notice Requirement is the minimum requirement set by the State of California. The State does not prohibit individual municipalities from setting stricter requirements and providing more notice to the community. In fact, other cities in California have chosen to require notice to a larger portion of the community. Additionally, these cities also include clauses that allow an even greater radius of notification be required when it is determined to be necessary or desirable.

San Diego, as America's Finest City, should heed the example of communities such as Pasadena, California, who have chosen to go beyond the minimum required by the State of California. KTPG requests the City of San Diego adopt stronger practices for notifying the community. A specific suggestion is proposed in Part 2 below.

Currently, When the Land Development Code requires a Notice of Application, Notice of Future Decision, Notice of Public Hearing, or other mailed notice, the notice distance is the same (300 feet from the boundary of the development) regardless of the scope or size of the project.

KTPG requests the City of San Diego modify the Notice by Mail requirement to distinguish between two classes of projects. Some projects would continue to have a 300 foot notice requirement, while larger projects would have a 1,000 foot notice requirement. The law would be changed to read as follows (The text in bold shows changes from existing law.):

Part 2 – Proposed Notice by Mail Requirement
