THE CITY OF SAN DIEGO

September 28, 2013

Dear San Diegans:

Welcome to the new San Diego Central Library, a dream 30 years in the making. The Central Library is proof that when the community works together, it can achieve a grand vision. The library is not only a beautiful public space, but a national model for collaboration. While the Central Library will house more than 1.2 million items, books are only part of this new center for literacy. The library also houses a charter high school, a career center, and various public art installations that together create a true public treasure.

The Central Library is a testament to rethinking public space and a great example of how combined funding sources can be used to create great civic buildings. The leadership of the City Council, who voted to approve this project on June 28, 2010, was a testament to our confidence that the community would step forward. The community did step forward and almost 40 percent of the library was privately funded. The generosity of philanthropists such as Joan and Irwin Jacobs, Darlene Shiley, the Hervey Family Foundation, Allison and Robert Price, and more than 3,000 individuals is worthy of our thanks.

Our institutional donors, the Centre City Development Corporation, the California State Library, and the San Diego Unified School District's Board of Trustees, all held a firm belief that this building would benefit San Diegans for decades to come. I am grateful to all the community partnerships that made this beautiful building possible. Also, I thank the San Diego Public Library Foundation for its extraordinary fundraising efforts, the creative and dedicated architects, contractors, and city staff who have delivered this world-class library.

The San Diego Central Library brings together the best of knowledge, technology, and human achievement in arts, culture, and community empowerment for all to experience. It will long be a place where people will come to explore their interests, learn new things, find a path to an improved life, and make connections to one another.

Welcome to your new San Diego Central Library. A dream come true for us all!

Sincerely,
