

To Whom It May Concern:

As a resident of East University City, I find the proposed re-districting plan to split University City absolutely ludicrous. UC is about as homogenous a community as you will find in all of San Diego. The middle and high schools are attended by kids on both sides of UC. We share just about everything as Governor Drive and Genesee connect the entire community. How did anyone decide that having different representatives for East and West University City would be appropriate? Why would East UC be associated with the industrial areas of Miramar, Mira Mesa, Sorrento Valley, and Kearny Mesa, while apparently, West UC is radically different than East UC and regarded as part of the university? Did anyone bother to look at the demographics?

Separating University City as proposed should never have been considered let alone make it this far in the proposal stage. This re-districting appears to be doing something for the sake of change without any real reason. Please dismiss the idea.
