

Statement on the President's Remarks Regarding San Diego

Last night, the President of the United States stood in front of a crowd and said, "Let 'em take out Los Angeles, let 'em take out San Diego."

The person whose job is to protect this country publicly invited a foreign adversary to attack American cities, as if the lives of the people who call them home don't matter.

His rhetoric is reckless and dangerous, and it shows a complete lack of judgment from a man whose words have real consequences.

It doesn't matter what political party you belong to. We should all expect the person sitting in the Oval Office to understand that the lives and safety of the American people are not something to play with.

A President has a responsibility to protect the American people.

All of us.

Donald's words do the opposite.

And San Diego damn sure isn't nobody's "small price to pay."
