

Conservancy groups want to re-wild areas in the city, but we must first re-humanize conservancy groups and take conservancy profit out of harming us and the environment.

Conservancy groups explain that they are not environmental groups, their primary goal is to eliminate parts of civilization they do not like regardless of the safety consequences to Humans. When corporations want to put something in place that can harm humans conservancy groups are their first stop.

When Westfield Mall wanted all traffic to continue up Genesee so their rents would remain high their first stop was the conservancy group “The Friends of Rose Canyon. Westfield did not want the Regents Road Bridge built. Had it been built traffic counts would have dropped on Genesee and so would Westfield Rents. Westfield payed half a million dollars for an EIR that somehow did not include ambulance service times. According to county statistics only having one of South UC’s 3 main roads completed results in 7 unnecessary deaths each year.

When Pure Water Vendors wanted the lucrative pipe path grinding through the heart of Clairemont and University, their first stop was conservancy groups. Long before any community announcement Pure Water notified conservancy groups and also conservancy officers individually that the pipe was coming. Conservancy groups quickly mobilized and convinced council to ban all future sewer construction in canyons. Pure Water also testified in open council that they did not bother to contact CALTRANS about placing the pipes adjacent to roads. The only path left was the profitable path their vendors wanted which vents sewer gas directly into the neighborhoods.

Conservancy groups have no interest in public safety. When the crossroads affordable housing project was being built in University City conservancy groups objected. In 2003 they burned it to the ground and to this day the crossroads fire is the largest eco-terrorist crime in the United States.

We need to re-humanize conservancy groups and address their addiction to dark corporate money.
