One-Year Anniversary of Peace Initiative Coincides with Vote on Privacy Advisory Commission

Last year, elected officials, community leaders & organizations joined forces to launch “The Peace Movement: Let’s Live, Let’s Love” and this work continues in reimagining public safety

SAN DIEGO, CA: Today marks the one-year anniversary of Councilmember Montgomery’s launch of The Peace Movement: Let’s Live, Let’s Love campaign aimed at providing a holistic approach to public safety, with short and long-term goals, including policy solutions that promote economic justice and improved community policing relationships.

This seminal anniversary coincides the unanimous vote by the Rules Committee to send the proposed Privacy Advisory Commission Ordinance to full council for consideration.

“Recently, I released my Road Map to Reimagining Policing and Public Safety, which contains key components for accountability and transparency measures. Today’s action by the Rules Committee is another monumental step towards achieving the goals of the Let’s Live, Let’s Love Movement,” said Montgomery. “This is especially crucial, as the use of surveillance technology in San Diego has further eroded trust between our communities, city officials, and law enforcement. I am thrilled that my colleagues voted for transparency and look forward to hearing both the Surveillance Ordinance and the Privacy Advisory Commission Ordinance at City Council this fall.”
