WHEREAS, To San Diego, as a community, there has come, in the death of Mr. John D. Spreckels, on June 7, an irreparable loss, for, in his passing, there has gone one who, for many years, has been a most ardent friend of the city, not alone in words but in deeds and actions, and

WHEREAS, "Men may come and men may go," to slightly paraphrase a line from Tennyson's "Brook," cities may go on forever. There are, however, potent forces which make for their betterment and upbuilding, and in the growth and development of San Diego, the influence of Mr. Spreckels has ever been a most important factor.

What he was as a man and what he has done for the city, through his many lines of financial interest, has been known and appreciated by many of his fellow citizens for years, and from now on, more and more, will he be missed in those circles which knew him best.

It falls to the lot of but few men to have so diversified connections with a city's upbuilding as had he, for, of a truth, scarcely a single important enterprise can be named in which he did not have an interest, and every public movement, having as its aim the civic betterment or the alleviation of conditions, gained his support, although this fact was not always given the publicity which many men seek.

His financial aid to various enterprises was not bound down to lines of creed nor fraternal affiliation. The fact that a cause was worthy was sufficient to gain his endorsement and assistance.

Now that he has passed from the field of earthly activity, it is the desire of this Common Council to take official note of his death, and, Therefore, Be It

Resolved, That this body does hereby extend to the family of Mr. Spreckels the sincere sympathy of its members, and, further

Resolved, That this resolution be entered in full upon the minutes of the Common Council and a copy thereof transmitted to the relatives.

Passed and adopted by the said Common Council of the said City of San Diego, California, this 14th day of June, 1926, by the following vote, to-wit:
