

Multiple Species Conservation Program

San Diego County is known nationwide for the tremendous diversity of its plants and animals, and for the number of species that would be considered rare or endangered.

The overall goal of the Multiple Species Conservation Program (MSCP) is to protect habitat in a coordinated fashion and use biological principles to insure the preservation of rare and endangered species.

Come join us to celebrate the MSCP's 15th year anniversary and learn about the habitat conservation accomplishments of the program as well as MSCP projects being implemented to conserve rare and endangered species.
