Unbought & Unbossed

This first-ever run for presidential nomination by a female person of color was not a polite exercise in symbolic electioneering. New York Democratic Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm's bid engendered strong, and sometimes bigoted opposition, setting off currents that affect American politics and social perceptions to this day.

Featuring stirring archival footage, period music, interviews with supporters, opponents and observers, and Chisholm's own commentary – then and now – CHISHOLM '72 is a remarkable recollection of a campaign that broke new ground in politics, and truly reached out to 'the people.'

Carole Kennedy, Ph.D., from the Political Science Department at San Diego State University and Midge Costanza, Special Assistant to President Jimmy Carter and friend of Shirley Chisholm will facilitate a discussion following the screening.
